BATS...

BATS... some migrate to warmer climates.
Most hibernate hanging upside down, often in vast inselvors; in winter, when few insects are available, and locate prey. Nearly all North American species are eyes and poor vision and use echolocation to navigate.

Their wings consist of a double membrane tightly stretched across enlarged arm bones.

Are the only mammals that fly.